Benesch is pleased to announce that Greg Goldman has joined the firm as a partner in its Real Estate Practice Group in New York. Greg maintains a broad real estate practice representing institutional investors, developers, operators and corporate clients, with a focus on structuring joint ventures and other equity investments. He also advises on acquisitions, dispositions, financing and leasing across a wide range of asset classes.

“Greg is an excellent addition to our Real Estate Practice Group and our New York office,” said Jeff Wild, Chair of Benesch’s Real Estate Practice Group and Firm Administrative Partner. “He brings significant experience structuring joint ventures and other equity vehicles, an area that continues to be important for many of our clients. His experience strengthens our capabilities in this area, and we’re excited to welcome him to the team.”

“This is an exciting time to join Benesch,” said Greg. “The firm has built significant momentum in its Real Estate Practice Group, and I was drawn to the opportunity to work alongside such a talented team and contribute to the practice’s continued growth.”

Greg also counsels clients on leasing and lease workouts, private equity fund subscriptions and internal structuring. He regularly advises on corporate real estate matters that arise in the context of larger transactions, including mergers and acquisitions, secured financings, capital markets transactions, and bankruptcy and workouts.

Prior to joining Benesch, Greg was counsel at King & Spalding. He earned his J.D. from the University of North Carolina School of Law and his B.A. from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Benesch’s Real Estate Practice Group has experienced substantial growth this year, including the addition of its Real Estate Finance and Structured Finance team, creating a full-service practice with more than 85 attorneys and professional staff. The team represents clients in complex acquisition, disposition, financing, structured financing, joint venture, leasing, and development projects across the country and around the globe, guiding clients through every stage of the real estate life cycle.
