SPEAKING ENGAGEMENT

The Environmental Justice Movement: A New Era of EPA Enforcement

MAY 27, 2021

Speakers: Reed W. Sirak

Environmental justice is a movement whose time has come, putting pressure on government and industry to right historic wrongs in communities of color and the poor. From sanitation and toxic waste to emissions, and water quality, many sites will likely experience more EPA inspections, tighter compliance, and higher penalties.

The Biden administration has already begun strengthening EHS regulations on many fronts. And activists have raised awareness to a level that can't be reversed. So there's no turning back, only moving forward in anticipation of more stringent enforcement.

Please join our expert speakers, Reed W. Sirak, Esq., of Benesch Friedlander Coplan & Aronoff LLP, and Jason Loh, Esq., of Red-on-line, as they share insights and little-known mitigation strategies for addressing environmental justice concerns.

Click here to register.

Reed W. Sirak | Associate, Real Estate & Environmental Practice Group | Benesch

Reed manages a broad range of transactional, compliance and litigation-based environmental, safety and health matters at Benesch. In addition to his environmental expertise involving real estate transaction, Reed's interdisciplinary approach to environmental law allows him to work effectively with Benesch's Corporate, Construction, Energy, Litigation, Polymers, Regulated Industries, and Transportation practice groups to solve complex environmental issues on behalf of some of the firm's largest clients. Reed earned a BA in Political Science from the University of Montana, and a Master of Environmental Law and Policy (MELP) and J.D. from Vermont Law School.

Jason Loh, Esq | EHS Legal Specialist | Red-on-line

Jason advises a broad range of commercial and industrial clients on their environmental and health and safety matters. He collaborates closely to identify regulations specific to their operations and processes, and provides regulatory support. Jason also counsels clients in Hazardous Materials Transportation matters. Before joining Red-on-line, Jason was a Staff Attorney at the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. Jason earned a B.A. in History from Gettysburg College, and holds a J.D. from Vermont Law School.