

Benesch Partner Paul Kremer Quoted in the New York Post on Legal Challenges to New York City's Pied-à-Terre Tax

SEPTEMBER 30, 2026

Benesch Litigation Partner Paul Kremer was quoted in a New York Post article titled, "Mamdani promises to push pied-a-terre tax despite influx of new lawsuits."

The article discusses ongoing legal challenges to New York City's pied-à-terre tax, including a recent court ruling requiring the city to revisit portions of its implementation process and disclose records used to identify affected properties. The litigation could impact how the city administers the proposed tax on certain high-value residential properties.

Discussing the court's ruling, Paul noted that "the city appeared not to do much research" about which properties would be targeted by the tax.

More: Mamdani promises to push pied-a-terre tax despite influx of new lawsuits

Paul Kremer is experienced in challenges to administrative actions, including Article 78 litigation challenging New York state and city administrative actions.