Best Lawyers Business Edition spoke with Benesch partner Kevin Frankel about recent antitrust losses involving major technology platforms and why the remedies imposed may ultimately matter more than the liability findings themselves.

Kevin discussed the challenge courts face in preserving legitimate efficiencies while ensuring that relief actually restores competitive conditions. He also outlined potential remedies involving distribution, interoperability, self-preferencing and structural separation and what those changes could mean for businesses that rely on dominant technology platforms.

As Kevin noted, businesses should prepare for uncertainty as remedies are designed and implemented, remain flexible in their platform relationships and consider participating in remedy proceedings when their interests are directly at stake.
