Overview

Jack Fraser focuses his practice on structured finance, advising clients on sophisticated transactions including cross-border financings, distressed situations and real estate finance transactions.

He represents clients across a broad range of asset classes, with particular experience involving esoteric and real estate assets in connection with repurchase and warehouse facilities, as well as public and private securitization transactions. Jack regularly counsels issuers, sponsors and financial institutions on commercial mortgage-backed securities (CMBS) and private placement transactions issued under Regulation S, Rule 144A, and Section 4(a)(2) of the Securities Act. He has advised on transactions spanning a variety of industries, including real estate finance, secondary debt markets, equipment finance, banking and cryptocurrency.

Prior to law school, Jack spent three years in New York's financial services sector working in capital markets, where he gained firsthand experience with investor considerations and market dynamics. This background enables him to advise clients with both legal and commercial perspectives.

Clients appreciate Jack's ability to connect with people of various backgrounds, and his business acumen when handling legal matters.
