Overview

John Hogan focuses his practice on commercial financing transactions involving real estate assets across New York and throughout the United States. He represents institutional and non-institutional lenders, borrowers, owners and investors in transactions spanning the debt and equity sides of the market. His experience covers a broad range of asset classes, including multifamily and mixed-use developments, office buildings, shopping centers, retail properties and commercial condominiums.

Clients turn to John for practical guidance on complex transactions involving multiple stakeholders, competing priorities and intricate financing structures. Drawing on years of experience representing parties across virtually every position in the capital stack, he helps clients identify critical issues early, structure workable solutions and keep deals moving toward closing. Whether negotiating financing terms, addressing collateral concerns or resolving transaction hurdles, John focuses on delivering direct, concise advice that aligns with his clients' business objectives.

John approaches every transaction with a holistic approach; he understands that successful deals require more than risk mitigation. They require creative problem-solving and a clear understanding of what each party needs to accomplish. John works to bridge gaps and find efficient solutions to structure transactions in ways that are both commercially practical and legally sound. Clients value his ability to balance protection with pragmatism, helping them achieve their goals while maintaining productive relationships with counterparties.

Known for his collaborative style and business-minded perspective, John finds the greatest reward in helping clients navigate challenges, build successful relationships and bring complex transactions to fruition. His combination of market knowledge and practical judgment enables him to serve as a trusted advisor on commercial real estate financing matters nationwide.
