Overview

Tyreye focuses his practice on litigation. He is drawn to the challenge of untangling complex fact patterns, identifying the key legal questions at stake and crafting persuasive arguments. A thoughtful and detail-oriented advocate, Tyreye approaches each matter with disciplined preparation, clear communication and a commitment to delivering impactful results.

During law school, Tyreye served as a student attorney in his university's Criminal Justice Clinic, where he prepared cases for trial, argued motions before the D.C. Superior Court and counseled clients throughout their matters. This role provided hands-on experience with pre-trial litigation, motion practice, negotiation and case development.

He also served as Captain of the Charles Hamilton Houston Moot Court Team, where he gained experience leading a team and collaborating on brief writing and oral argument strategy. Through this work, Tyreye strengthened his advocacy skills and developed an appreciation for thorough preparation and building the foundation of a strong argument.
